“ In her final years, my mom's daily gifts came in the form of a phone ringing. She looked forward to talking to her children, family, and friends. It was such a revelation to me to finally understand that our phone calls were my gift as well.

I love you mamma. I miss you so much already. I will carry you everywhere I go. I promise.

“ What I remember most about Delores and admired her for was that she always spoke her truth. She never left you wondering where she stood on any given issue. A strong hard working woman with plenty of spunkiness about her that probably came from living in that greatest generation era. An era of great hardship for those who lived through the Depression, who faced its share of adversity and problems through the Second War and gave birth to the gazillion baby boomers. Delores even managed to one up most of her peers and throw in a generation X'er for good measure. Thats how I remember her, working well into her 70's, always going and giving that little extra.

Oh, and she made some of the best divinity and fudge ever at Christmas!

I'll miss her and some of our little chats about what great kids we have. She was a good mama.

Best Blessings & Big Hugs to you all, Judi
