“ Jack was a "Panera friend" we visited almost weekly for many years along with his other Panera friends. He was older than many of these friends but often seemed the sharpest. And he certainly could be cantankerous at times LOL. My wife would bring him home-baked goods that he wolfed down and took home (and often hid from his other Panera friends LOL). We were impressed by his culinary skills especially when he shared his recipe for string bean pizza, his stories of youth (something about Willie Nelson???) and we enjoyed his daily recounts of the ups and downs of his card-playing at Hollywood Casino. He always carried books, e.g. The Zen of Poker, that I doubt he ever finished. We missed him during the pandemic and will miss him every time we go to Panera's.
