“ My Uncle Jay was just four years older than me, which made him more like a big brother than an uncle. He tormented me like older brothers do. When I was two years old, six-year-old Jason strapped me into a high chair, told me to be quiet, and gave me a very unfortunate haircut. He locked me in the blanket cabinet so many times I hold him responsible for my claustrophobia.

Jason taught me how to catch a baseball, how to play hide and seek, and that the only way to eat pancakes and waffles was with peanut butter. He taught me every word to Gangsta's Paradise and Punk Rawk Show. He is the only person I have ever known who hated cheese.

When I was 11 and Jason was a moody teenager, I told him, in a very dramatic fashion, that he had changed. He was no longer my goofy, country music loving uncle that liked hanging out with me. So, he later came into the kitchen dressed in his Wranglers and cowboy hat.

He used to ask me who my favorite uncle was, I think he always knew he just wanted to hear me say it out loud. Rest easy Uncle Jason, love you forever.
