“ Dear Niece Jenny,

I wish you could have had more years on this planet, watching your son Blake grow into the fine, successful man he'll become after his well-studied school years. That, along with playing with the grandkids or at least well-loved cats and/or dogs that you would have been invited to beast-sit while he travels.

Last year, when I finally, at last gave you the jewel I had promised after so many years, I had resolved to make an earring set to present to you the next time we alighted on USA Soil from our home in the other Oz, on the other side, upside-down of the pretty blue marble that is Earth. This sentiment was intended to land as a "patience bonus".

Blake can now be the recipient and if he's not a matched-earrings guy, then he'll have to do with a pendant. I hope our paths cross again, Jenny.

Rest well and love,

Uncle Sam and Jean
