“ When I came to Habitat for Humanity Mason was a guiding light for me. He and I became friends even though he worked for me and he never questioned a thing I asked him to do. I think military was our common bond and we trusted each other. His faith stood out more than any other part of him and he shared his love for the Lord to everyone who would listen, and even to some who didn't want to hear it. His vision of the life after this was something he valued dearly and now is his time to embrace it for all eternity. You have found peace now my friend and on a day that I do not know, we will meet again. Thank you for the time you gave me.

“ I was once told that if you get through life with more than a couple really close friends, you're fortunate. Mason was one of those to me. I don't think he ever realized how much I admired him. I just didn't have the words. But we expressed our love for each other so, in that, there are no regrets. Please, as awkward as it might be, express your love to your closest friends. You won't regret it.
