“ There was a time when my daughter, Alyssa, was about 3 years old, and we lived at the Mayport Naval Station where the cable television came in to the house via an overhead line that stretched across the road. Each time a moving van went by, the cable would get pulled from the house and we would lose those most necessary cartoons and children's programs. This particular time, my husband was out to sea and Alyssa was certain that I could not handle the situation. She insisted on calling her Papa for guidance. He assured her that her cartoons would be restored and gave her instructions to pass along to me. She hung up the phone, gave me explicit instructions for what Papa said should be done, and was happy to be assured that all would be well in the morning. I am forever grateful that Papa was there to make a little girl, who was desperately missing her daddy, feel supported. We love you dad. And Alyssa has always loved her Papa.
