“ It’s hard to explain a loss like this. Growing up, I didn’t see much of you. It wasn’t until I was graduated and making my own big girl decisions that I got to enjoy your company and even then, I can’t say I fully appreciated or grasped all that you were made to be. It’s weird how someone who you thought had such little impact on your daily life can leave such a big mark when taken away. I’m thankful for the family gatherings you were part of. I’m thankful for all of those silly jokes you got out of the newspapers that I never understood. I’m thankful for the smiles I got every time I saw you. Your face would always light up, and I will carry that light with me for the rest of my life!! I am still very much processing and taking baby steps to move forward but if there’s anything I’ve learned from you, it’s to never take small things for granted. They may not seem so big in the moments that you experience them, but when it’s gone forever, you get to fully see how great it was. Your body may be taken from me, but I will have the memories we got to create forever. I love you, grandpa. Rest In Peace — say hi to grandma for me
