“ wrote this letter to you son the day after you passed. So hard to think of you being gone now. So hard to believe its been a month now. Feels like it was yesterday.

I had you on January 24, 1986 I was only 17, when I had you. I was scared out of my mind. Not knowing what I was going to do. The one thing I did know is you saved my life. You and I grew up with one another. We taught one another how to become strong and fight for what we thought was right. I made my mistakes along the way, you and I had our conversation about what had gone on, from time to time. You would always tell me "if I cant count on you then I have no one because we always have each others back" I will miss our conversation son and our disagreements. We was a lot a like and we always understood one another. I counted your toes and fingers that morning at the hospital before I had to let you go. I told myself, " I counted your toes and fingers, when you came into this world. I was going to count them before you went back to heaven" I miss you every second son. I am trying so hard. But the second are really hard. Till I see you again. Save mom a place right next to you...I love you always (Me) MOM

“ I light this candle in your memory to keep pushing forward..... I remember when I found out you and my brother were good friends I knew then you were good peoples.... I was only a kid then but as I grow older now I realize all those times you came down on me hard it was for my brother and now I have to keep pushing without you to.... I will make it I promise

“ I have a lot of fond memories of Michael. I remember when we were in Forbes boot camp he would pray and thank God before every meal. I remember when we were in Ycat and had the same first hour class in school, Science/Biology with Mr. Scott. Michael would always ask questions in class, if he didn't know the answer he would ask the teacher to explain. I always admired him for that. Living in a generation where people act like they are "too cool for school", Michael wasn't one of those kids. He wanted to learn more and get educated. As we know Michael was a tough guy, so it was inspiring to see a man of his character willing to learn, ask questions, and take education serious. I remember his love for basketball. He gave it his all any time we were playing ball. He could dribble and had a good shot too! I remember him always being a man of respect, if you showed it to him, he showed it to you! I remember his strong love for his family. And also how he enjoyed making jokes and clowning around. He was a great friend. Loyal and true to his word. I have a lot of memories of the times we shared together. I will honor his name and be here for his family like he would have for any of us! Much love and respect! Rest In Paradise Michael James Hernandez!
