“ The loss of someone special to you brings us so many wake up calls. It has been 2 weeks without my sister. Her passing has left an unthinkable void in my life and, along with this new reality, has come a number of valuable realignments in my thinking and behavior. I've realized I am not in as much control of my life as I think... neither was she.

I am grateful for Shannon. I am more grateful. When going along in life and all is well, its wonderful. It's delightful to feel like the seas are calm, the load is easy, your heart is light. But life gets really precious when there's a threat to losing an important part of it. I wish I was more naturally grateful all the time for everything. Shannon, will be missed. I loved that she sent text messages to my children encouraging them to be better humans, and to simple let them know she loved them.
